Since the

there has been a very simple but widely held assumption that we are a species of thinking individuals and human behaviour is best understood by examining the psychology of individuals. It appears,

Sooner, that this insight is plain wrong. The evidence from a number of leading

suggests that our species is designed as a
herd or group
animal. Mark Earls applies

this evidence to the traditional mechanisms of marketing and consumer behaviour, with a result that necessitates a complete rethink about these subjects. HERD provides a host of unusual examples and

humanity's

that people are living off earth's capital rather than its income. However, not all countries are equal and this book explores why apparently similar patterns of daily living can lead to larger and environmental impacts. The contributors

describe daily
life in many different places
in the world and then calculate
the
environmental impact of these
ways of living
from the

perspective of ecological and
carbon footprints. This leads to comparison and
discussion of
what living
within the limits of the planet might mean. Current footprints for countries are

national statistics and
these hide the variety of
impacts made by individual
people and the

This book takes a 'bottom-up'
approach by

The purpose is to show that future. Offering
